ALEXANDRA MIRON

Product Manager · B2C Acquisition Funnels & Experimentation

Be'er Sheva, Israel • +972 55-269-1864 • miron.alexandrra@gmail.com • linkedin.com/in/alexandramiron8 • portfolio-alexmir8.vercel.app

---

Hello,

I'm applying for the Product Manager B2C role in Be'er Sheva. I applied in September and I'm applying again with an updated CV, since I've been in touch with someone on your product team in the meantime.

Two things in the posting are the centre of what I do.

The first is spec quality. For the last four years I've owned B2C acquisition funnels at TripleTen — the quiz, the landing pages and the flows behind them — and I write the specs the engineers build from. A year ago I built an agent pipeline that takes one of those specs to production on its own — build, a QA regression gate that blocks any failing release, telemetry and data-layer validation, design-system enforcement, then deploy. It only works when the spec is exact, so my specs got better the hard way. Spec to production went from 14 days to 3, and page production moved from a five-figure monthly agency bill to a software subscription.

The second is testing at volume. We run 2 to 5 A/B tests a month across up to five concurrent funnels. Seven tests on the quiz entry screen took start rate from 41% to 48% with no loss in lead quality. Ten depth interviews pairing the live ad creative with the landing page showed the value proposition sitting below the fold; rebuilding around decision clarity lifted conversion to qualified lead by 18.5% ($p < 0.01$). With our analysts I built a pre-scoring formula that added 14% more qualified leads and freed about eight hours of sales time a week.

I also ran creative production at around 100 videos and banners a month, budget included, so working alongside a Graphics team is familiar ground rather than something I'd be learning.

One gap, said plainly. My product work has been web, not native mobile. The paid traffic came from Meta and TikTok so the users were on phones, but I haven't owned store releases, ASO or ratings. That's context I'd pick up in a quarter — the rest of the cycle is the same one I run now.

I live in Be'er Sheva.

Alexandra Miron